- *The Bahnschutz jurisdictional mandate extended to railway equipment, rolling stock, and buildings and bridges. In the days just after the founding of the Weimar Republic they acted as a mobile strike force for the regular police. They would arrive as heavily armed riot police in armoured trains to back-up the regular police, when called, during the heaviest street fighting with Communist and Spartikus uprisings. This is where they earned their stripes employing special weapons and tactics in the form of armoured vehicles, light artillery, and heavy machine guns. The street cops loved them and this later gave them broad powers and gravitas in the police state of the National Socialists. £150-180
